

Attracting Immigrants to Rural Areas During the COVID-19 Pandemic

Renfrew Lanark Local Immigration
Partnership

Ryan Gibson

gibsonr@uoguelph.ca
@ryanfgibson

Louis Helps

whelps@uoguelph.ca

THE STATE OF RURAL IMMIGRATION

- Dominance of MTV
- historically low arrivals in rural, tide is changing
- Rural immigration strategies often aligned to:
 - Address labour shortages in local economies
 - Population growth
 - Increase cultural diversity

CALGARY HERALD NEWS OPINION SPORTS BUSINESS ARTS LIFE CAREERS OBITS CLASSIFIEDS DRIVING

NEWS NATIONAL FEATURED: CALGARY HERALD CHRISTMAS FUND CALGARY STAMPEDEERS CANNABIS ENR MORE

Canada's small cities and rural areas desperate for immigrants

ALIA DHARSSI Updated: October 26, 2016

Deep in Manitoba's Bible Belt, the small cities of Winkler and Morden have drawn so many immigrants recently that newcomers are helping create new places of worship.

There are now more than 25 churches in Winkler, up from 18 at the turn of the millennium. More churches are under construction, while Muslim families in Winkler and Morden leased a building in downtown Winkler this year and converted it into a mosque.

Is Immigration to Rural Areas in Canada's Future?

A surge in urbanization in Canada has led to the decline of rural areas, leaving Canadians with the hope that immigration can fill the void.

Canada's most recent census, administered in 2011, made it clear that Canada's major cities are booming. More than 23.1 million Canadian live in one of Canada's 33 metropolitan areas, marking just under 70% of the population as city dwellers. A total of 35% of Canada's population lives in one of Canada's three largest cities, Toronto, Montreal, or Vancouver.

While the population growth in cities is an excellent prospect for business in major cities, the growth seems to be occurring at the expense of rural areas. Much of the growth in urban areas is driven by a combination of immigration from abroad and migration from small towns and rural areas, leaving Canada's rural areas to shrink in both population and economic impact.

tvo Never stop learning

Current Affairs Documentaries Programs TVKids Education TV Schedule About TVO Support Us

The Next Ontario Climate Watch The Food Chain Shared Values Podcasts Ontario Hubs

Shared Values

How can rural communities attract the next generation of immigrants?

Published on Aug 16, 2016 by John Michael McGrath

Follow @tvo_program

Share

Douglas Todd: Immigrants could prosper in Canada's small towns

DOUGLAS TODD Updated: September 1, 2017

estock Crops Farm Living Video Farmville Classifieds Subscriptions Digital Edit

MAIL MAY BE DELAYED! HOW CAN I RECEIVE MY PAPER?

Immigration programs target rural Canada

By Jeffrey Carter

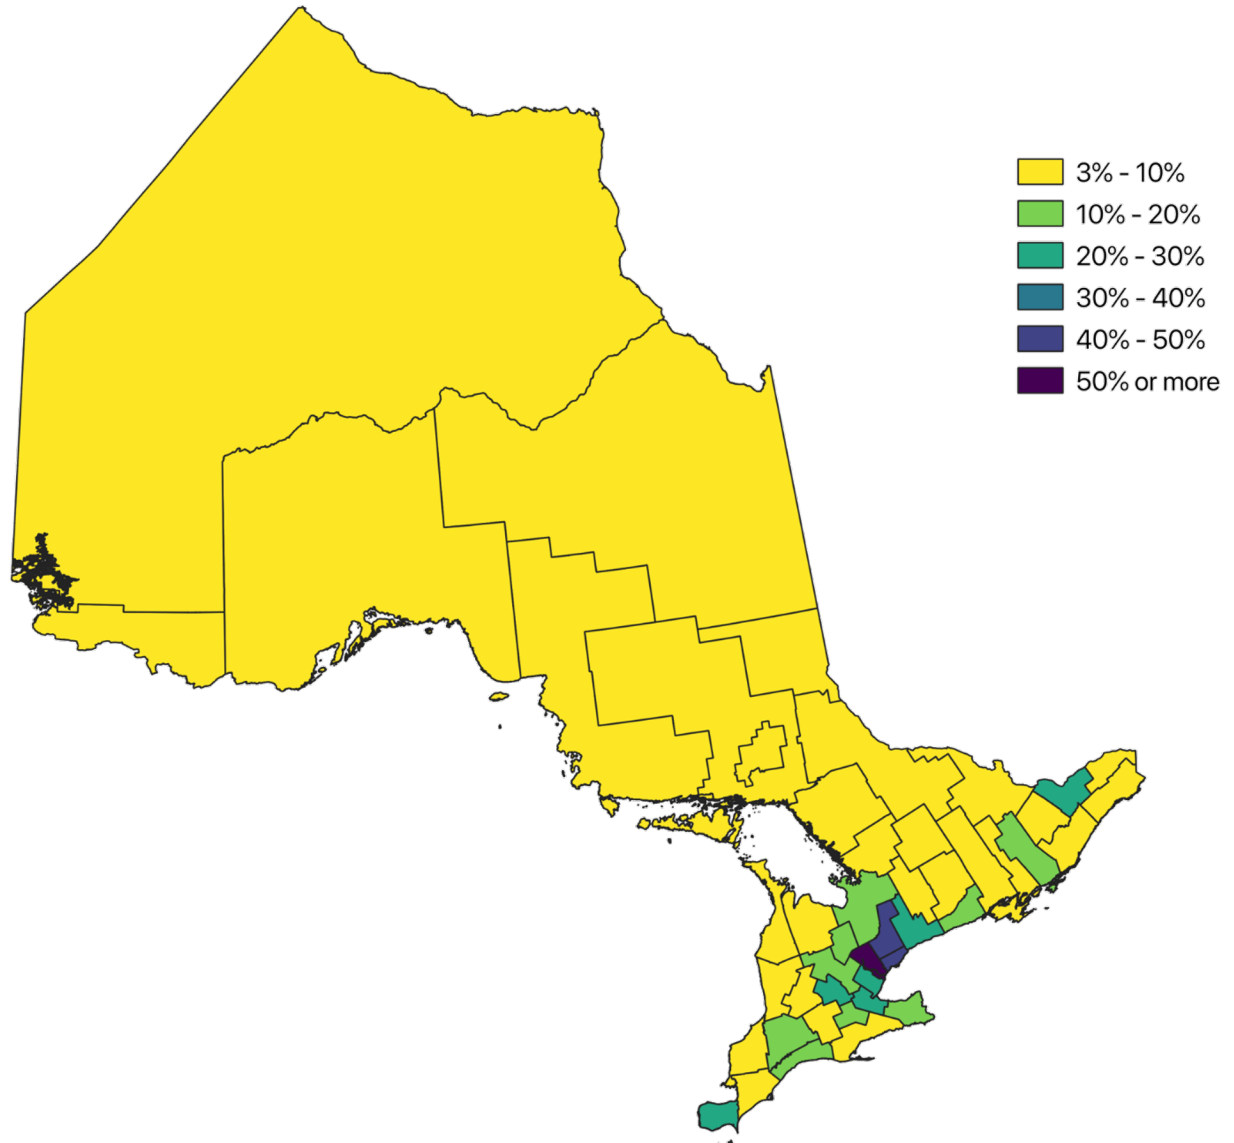

Published: October 27, 2016

News 0 comments

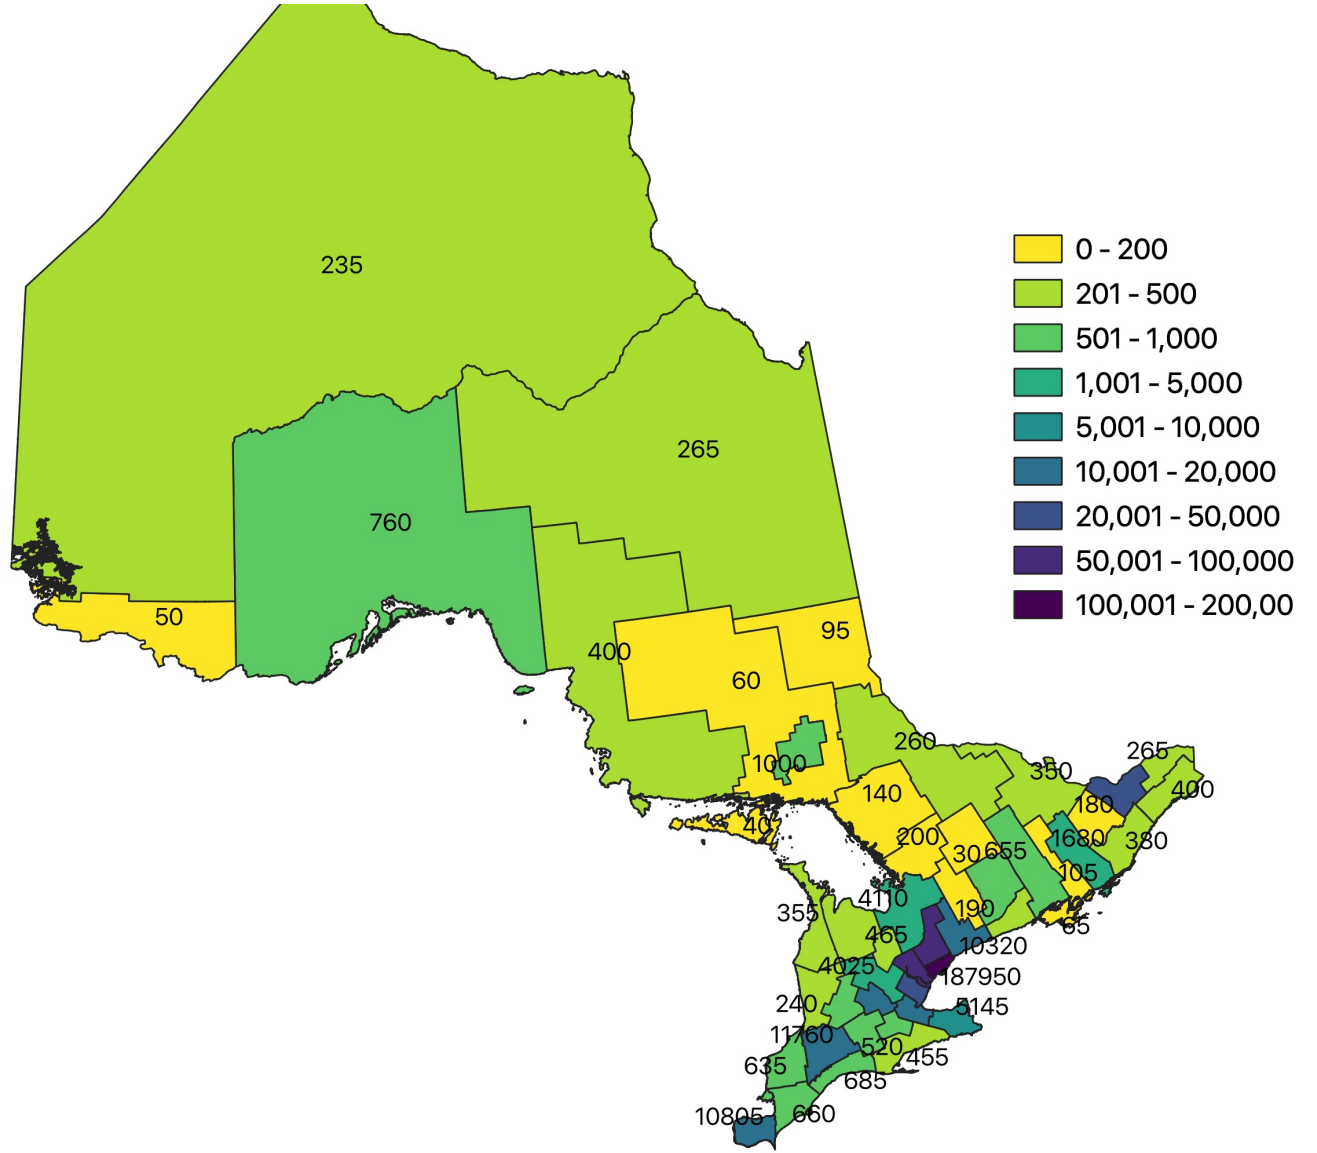

f t v

Lena Gahwi, left, Shetha Roomi, Naomi Finseth, Gemma Mendez-Smith and Oliver Pryce spoke recently at a conference about promoting rural areas to new immigrants. | Jeffrey Carter photo

- » approximately 146,010 immigrants in rural Ontario
- » 5% of all immigrants in Ontario
- » 7,955 immigrants arrived between 2011-2016
- » 62% arrived before 1980

Immigrants arriving between 2011-2016

Rural Considerations

CHALLENGES

- Distance and density
- Availability of settlement services
- Smaller employment markets
- Historically, low cultural diversity

OPPORTUNITIES

- Strong voluntary and charitable sectors
- Strong sense of 'place' and 'attachment'
- Affordable housing
- Employment opportunities
- Quality of life

THE COVID-19 DISRUPTION

COVID-19 FACTORS HINDERING RURAL IMMIGRATION

- Border closures; restricted travel
- Disrupted employment opportunities in rural
- Disruptions to immigrant settlement service delivery
- Increased pressure on housing from urban residents re-locating
- Immigration processing slowed down
- Limited broadband connectivity
- Decreased access to health and social services (particularly if no broadband or vehicle access)
- Intra-regional and intra–provincial travel discouraged

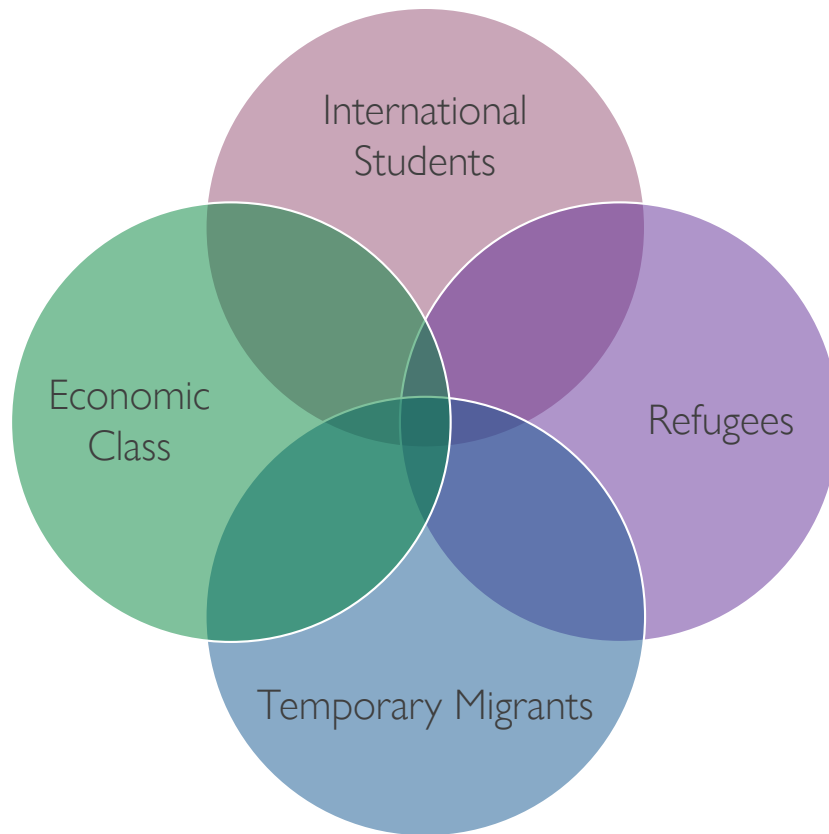

IMPACT CHANGES BY IMMIGRANT TYPE

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS

- loss of income,
- closure of educational facilities,
- uncertain whether to remain in Canada or return home,
- not eligible for many COVID-19 support programs provided to Canadian residents

IMPACT CHANGES BY IMMIGRANT TYPE

TEMPORARY MIGRANTS

- Delayed employment, loss of income
- Vulnerable to illness
- Variability in working conditions
- Social isolation

WHAT HAVE WE LEARNED ...

- Rural immigration challenges \neq urban immigration challenges
- Increased stress and uncertainty for rural immigrants due to COVID-19
- Increases in discrimination and racism towards newcomers
- Newcomers face additional vulnerabilities, often unnoticed
- Spaces for building welcoming communities are compromised by social distancing
- Broadband connectivity is critical infrastructure
- Innovative support for rural newcomers
- Human and financial capital is nearing exhaustion

WELCOMING COMMUNITIES IN COVID-19?

POST-COVID-19 WELCOMING COMMUNITIES

- Need to re-think and innovate welcoming community strategies and activities
 - Bridge electronic connections and relationships
 - Need to ensure online information about communities is up to date
- Continue multi-stakeholder approach to activities and information sharing
- Primary drivers of rural immigration still important:
 - Jobs
 - Housing
 - Quality of life
- Caution around per capita funding formulas for settlement services

MOVING FORWARD

- Mitigate negative impacts of COVID-19
- Advocate that urban strategies are not sufficient in rural communities
- Empower place-based approaches
- Evidence based decision making

www.ruraldev.ca